Q uickly taking you through the intro, all I wanna convey is that I believe photography is all about to take a hold of the essence of a moment. It's not just limited to capturing a visually attractive view. It's not only taking that picture and keeping it in your systems. It's much more.

It's about apprehending the meaning, the feeling, the emotion of the moment, even after watching it after a long time. It's about the happiness, the small smirk of smile that comes to your face when see a picture, years later and it brings you afresh a lot of memories, moments of joy, togetherness, love, care, sympathy—inshort the main ingredients that are needed in one's life to make it worthwhile spending time with people, connecting, making relations, maintaining them and establishing a change, making or creating something that will prove their life worthy.

Okay, now coming back to the point, in this coffee table book, I've tried to display all those moments that I went through and which made me feel that capturing these will definately remind me of good, happy times years later along with being visually appealing to anyone who comes across it.

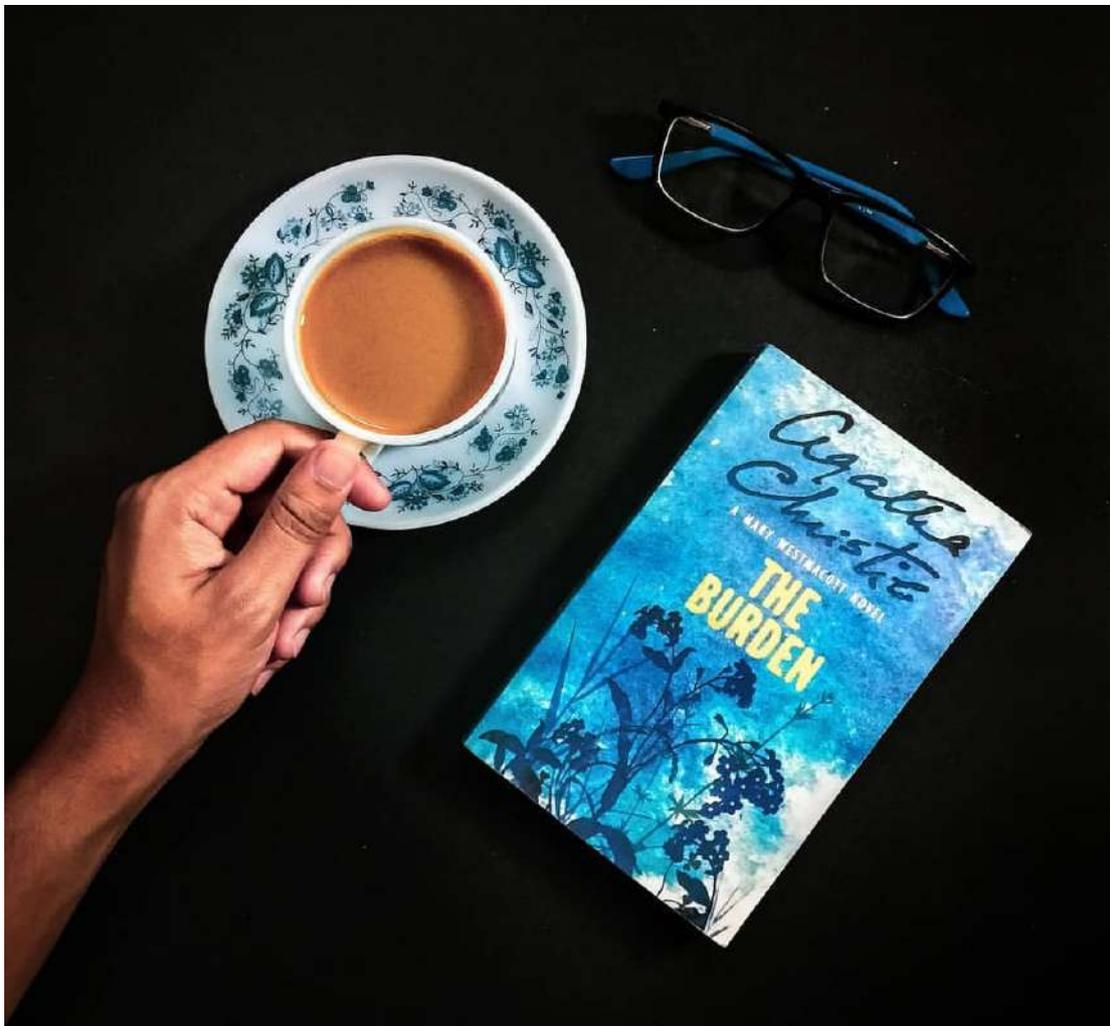

It's not that a photograph taken by someone is good and other taken by someone else is bad. No two photos can ever be compared. Yes, talking about technicalities, you can. But every other picture taken, captured, seized is precious and worthwhile. Every other photograph captured strikes a chord in someone or the other's mind and bring back many moments. many memories.

Thus, while having a look at my coffee table book, do enjoy watching the photographs and try living them. Try to regain some of YOUR memories while going through them. If you do find even one of them worth seizing your attention and pulling some your past. happy moments or memories back to you. do write your comments at the back of the book. Because compliments means the most to any artist. here, a photographer.
